Community and Environment Assessment Findings

The community and environment assessment of Naples, FL, revealed several key trends. Naples is a suburban community with affluent neighborhoods, pristine beaches, and a vibrant cultural scene. The population is diverse, with a significant number of older adults and a noticeable presence of people exercising and participating in outdoor activities. However, there are also pockets of homelessness and individuals with hygiene issues, indicating socio-economic disparities. These findings are closely related to my practicum topic, which focuses on health promotion among vulnerable populations, notably human trafficking victims. Understanding the community's socio-economic dynamics and health behaviors helps in tailoring interventions to address these disparities effectively (Chisolm-Straker & Stoklosa, 2017).

Social Determinants of Health

The assessment highlighted significant social determinants of health (SDOH) within Naples. Two strengths observed were the availability of health resources such as hospitals, clinics, and pharmacies, and the presence of recreational facilities promoting physical activity (Centers for Disease Control and Prevention [CDC], 2021). These resources support overall community health and wellness. However, two areas for improvement include addressing homelessness and improving public transportation (Marmot & Allen, 2020). Enhancing support services for the
