Answer:

Identify how you could improve your leadership communication across interprofessional teams.

Hello class,

For interprofessional teams to be highly effective, there needs to be an ongoing collaboration of the team members. Effective collaboration coupled with effective communication within interprofessional teams increases office efficiencies and enhances the patient experience. Well-coordinated collaboration among interprofessional team members promotes comprehensive, cost-effective, and person-centered patient care that focuses on disease prevention and health promotion. A synched team, in terms of communicating their needs, is effective in executing assigned roles, especially improving care delivered to patients. A high level of communication and collaboration fosters trust among members of the interprofessional team which sets them up to deliver their services more effectively (Donnelly et al., 2019).

To achieve such a high level of leadership communication, I will employ the SBAR communication program. SBAR stands for Situation-Background-Assessment-Recommendation. This program will help me strengthen interactions between team members and individual patients. This tool would help me to accurately, efficiently, and consistently
